EXPRESSION OF INTEREST FOR PRODUCT PROMOTION CAMPAIGN

1. INTRODUCTION

With the objective of increasing the export of value added products, APEDA has been working for some time to evolve the strategy including identification of products to be covered and markets to be focused upon. In this context, a study was awarded by APEDA to ILFS, specially for identification of value added products with potential and target markets and a gist of findings of the report is given below:

- In India though wastages in agriculture are massive, value addition is still at a low level of around 6%. On the contrary, in developing countries the level of value addition is much higher and shift is taking place in from consumption of basic staples to processed food products. In high income countries demand for value added products is increasing through processed ready-to-eat products.
- India mainly exports value added products like pulverized guar gum, wheat flour, groundnut kernels, mango pulp, dehydrated vegetables etc. and top products with substantial value addition are biscuits & confectionery, Indian ethnic foods etc.
- India’ strength lies in Wheat, onion, garlic, fruits, vegetables, maize, cassava, potato, grapes, tomatoes, black gram, and spices and based on these raw materials the value added products may be identified. One recommendation of IL&FS study for APEDA was to consider entering into agreements with major retailers in target countries for product placement and visibility and also consider undertaking specific studies to understand the consumer behaviour towards such products. In this regard APEDA proposed to get a strategy formulated immediately to identify the modalities and instrumentalities for campaigning in international markets for Indian processed foods. It was also considered that major players do carry out market studies either in-house or by engaging market analysts before launching a new product or entering a new market, but the information is not available to small players. Even in the case of Indian food processors that are using world-class production processes and maintain high quality, it is often viewed as an unreliable source of food and agro products in foreign market. Some immediate steps are needed towards brand building of Indian food products in foreign markets. It was suggested that APEDA may consider embarking on promotional campaign to promote high value added "Made in India" food products in the international markets.
